

Veritas Contributor License Agreements

Prior to receiving information from any contributor, Veritas requires that all contributors complete, sign, and submit a Veritas Personal Contributor License Agreement (VPCLA). The purpose of the VPCLA is to clearly define the terms under which intellectual property has been contributed to the project and thereby allow Veritas to defend the project should there be a legal dispute regarding the software at some future time. A signed VPCLA is required to be on file before an individual is given commit privileges to the Veritas open source project. Please note that the privilege to commit to the project is conditional and may be revoked in certain circumstances.

If you are employed by a corporation, a Veritas Corporate Contributor License Agreement (VCCLA) is also required before you may contribute to the project. If you are employed by a company, you may have signed an employment agreement that assigns intellectual property ownership in certain of your ideas or code to your company. We require a VCCLA to make sure that the intellectual property in your contribution is clearly contributed to the project, even if that intellectual property had previously been assigned by you.

Please complete the VPCLA and, if required, the VCCLA and return to the Veritas project administrator for the applicable project. Please be sure to keep a signed copy for your records.
